Millennium Power Services adds Key Industry Veteran Kurt C. Anderson

WESTFIELD, MA...Kurt C. Anderson, a longtime representative of products and services for control valves, steam conditioning equipment, and instrumentation for the paper, process, and power industries throughout the northeastern United States and beyond, has joined Millennium Power Services, a full service valve repair shop, new products distributor/representative and manufacturer of new valve parts.

As Account Manager for select customers in Maine and New Hampshire, and as a provider of technical product support for the entire Millennium organization, Anderson's main focus will be to capture new growth opportunities through the integration of products and services to the mutual benefit of Millennium's client base, vendors, and team members.

Anderson provides career experience that spans four decades, all of which have been in the industry. He said he was drawn to Millennium because of the company's "clear vision, methodical growth, internal processes, dedication to customer service, and their solid portfolio."

Aaron Florek, Millennium's National Sales and Marketing Manager, sees Anderson as a dynamic extension to the firm's values and direction. "We offer some of the finest technology and service available today. Kurt is a seasoned professional who not only has expertise in technology from inception through to performance, but also knows the importance having positive relationships with customers."

"Today, successful process automation must combine superior workmanship with open communication with customers," Anderson said. "Over the years, technical aspects of industry might have changed, but one thing that remains is the need to build and maintain trust. Millennium's mission reflects that, and the company proves it every day. I am pleased to now be part of the team."

Anderson resides on East Pond in Smithfield, ME with Janet, his bride of forty years and golden retriever, Cooper.
